subjugation[edit] after china's insurance, one possible alternative is to continue in the direction of India (British Raj) as the presence of both India and China as puppets will make Japan more or less safe from losses. India, unlike China, is a puppet in the hands of the UK, so attacking them is likely to lead to war with the British. Since India is very similar to China, with a sub-bottomed workforce but lacking early industry, the recommended approach for Japan would be an invasion on two fronts of India. Specifically, one example is the territorial invasion of eastern India through south-western China (and through Siam if the country in question had been puppeted) as well as a simultaneous maritime invasion of Ceylon island and from there to south India. Another option could be securing Tibet, Nepal and Bhutan and attacking from this trend as well although this comes with the denial of a very stifling offensive path due to the Himalayas. Once again, it is preferable to strike Japan quickly and hit hard so that India is not given any chance to launch an effective defence. This time, however, it is possible that the player has encountered British forces and other allies which is a challenge in itself as these forces (usually) will be better equipped and which can make them more difficult to fight than the typical Indian division. Oil Rush [Edit] Behind India (British Raj) is the world's fifth largest oil producer - Iran. Its capture will secure twice the amount of oil provided by the Dutch East Indies, providing Japan with medium-term oil needs as it expands into the Pacific Ocean. Despite the small size of Iran's border with India and non-alignment, it is very, very short Make the invasion surprisingly difficult (but still a matter of weeks). Iran also gives you access to the Soviet Union. If the German Reich were already close to Stalingrad, the invasion through Armenia could roll up the entire front. If not, you could attack directly to Stalingrad or even Moscow while the bulk of Soviet troops are connected in the west (which will collapse when half the front is deployed to deal with your invasion). You can end the war by Christmas. Continue down after securing Indonesia and Indochina, Japan has the option of conquering and seizing Australia and New Zealand. The capture of these territories would lead to Japan's dominance over Oceania and also remove the allies' ability to effectively supply energy in the South Pacific. Australia and New Zealand are similar to most small European countries and have good technology but limited manpower. The extent to which they defended them if attacked varied greatly; If Australia and/or New Zealand remain loyal to the United Kingdom, they are likely to send some of their troops abroad to help their Lord on other fronts. If they choose to cut ties and become independent, however (by together for victory), then they will be less inclined to send their troops elsewhere, and therefore may be able to launch a more solid defense. In a motion to, going down the a national focus trees can lead to Australia and/or New Zealand the admission of axis or Comintern and Australia can even form a species with the USA, doll/attachment New Zealand and attack japan.
